During a discussion in the House of Commons on the night of July 2, on the bill authorizing a farther auspension of the British navigation laws, Lord John Russell, in reply to Lord G. Bentinck, stated [Times report] that 538 foreign ships, representing 63,555 tons, had been admitted with grain, free of duty, under the Corn Law suspension-that about fifteen millions of bushels of foreign grain had been admitted beyond the quantity in any former yearand that six millions of the people had been fed on foreign grain. His lordship then stated the grounds on which the government act, as follows:

In France there has been a very go In France there has been a very great and correct respect at the time it was estimated that France required a supply equal to 18 days consumption by on account, to 25 days according to another, and to 4 days consumption by a third, it was thought the had days' consumption by a third; it was thought the hist-vest of last year in France was deficient to that extent. In Germany the harvest was so deficient that on the Rhine the price of corn rose to 90s, per quarter, and the peace of the country was disturbed in Fruesia and other parts, in consequence of that extraordinary rise in the price of provisions. This has called for an importation from all parts of Europa and America from which a supply was to be bad. There has been an extraordinary from all parts of Europa and America from which a supply was to be had. There has been an extraordinary supply from America, in this country the importation has been without precedent; but, on the other hand, france has required the greater pert of the importation from the Black Sea; the corn which, if there had been a good harvest in france, would have been brought here, was taken to supply the consumption of that country. In January last we thought the case so argent, that we proposed a suspension of the case so argent, that we proposed a suspension of the case so argent, that we proposed a suspension of the case so argent, that we proposed a suspension of the case so argent, that we proposed a suspension of the saverage price of corn for the six weeks previous, was 63s. 3d. The house agreed unanimously to a suspension of those laws. Since then there has been a most extraordinary in the price of corn, we have seen corn in Mark lane at 100s. 108s, and on one day 115s a quarter. (Hear, hear). The price has since failen, but the average price for the last six weeks, according to the Leadon Gazett, 199s. 10d, per quarter. With corn at that price we are told it is unreasonable to ask for a farther suspension of the navigation laws.

If there is a necessity for corn you ought to admit it in whatever ships it may come. But what are the prospects of the next year? Who can tell us, however san.

If there is a necessity for corn you ought to admit it in whatever ships it may come. But what are the prospects of the next year? Who can tell us, however sangume may be our expectations at the present moment, that the weather of the next six weeks will be such as to give us a bountiful and abundant harvest? Who can tell whether the general harvest on the continent of Europe will be pleutiful nay, more, who can say if the great abundance with which America was biessed in the past year will be repeated in the present one r and that in the ensuing Autumn we may not have a difficulty not only with regard to the supply from England and Europe, but with regard to the supply from England and Europe, but with regard to that larger supply we have had in the present year from America? We have a most extraordinary consumption going on. I believe in many respects that the extensive railway works going on have alleviated the calculity by causing a great demand for labor. But at ino same time, when we look at the amount of railway calls from the mouth of January to this period—I believe about £21.000,000, of which £18,000,000 were required for the United Kingdor—It is impossible not to perceive that the expenditure of a large next of the test of the test of the control of the control of a large next of the test of the control of the enterty of th sumption—a consumption that would not never taken place but for that extraordinary expenditure. That consumption leads again to an increased price, which of vided smoon the people of the country. While, therefore, the construction of railroads has in one sense been extremely beneficial, in snother way it has aggravated the difficulty, for the much greater consumption, it be caused must have tended to make the quantity of food in the country last a shorter period of time than it would otherwise have done. Taking all these circumstances are from Bremen, and among them were 6 nurs. otherwise have done. Taking all these circumstances into consideration, my opinion is that the policy of Parliament should be to open the doors for the admission of food as wide as possible, (base, hear) and to take away every restriction that will prevent a single quarter of Corn from coming into the country. It you mean to keep up the state of your manufacture, if you wish to maintain the condition of the laboring population, and lastly, looking at the state of the revenue, you ought to pursue the policy of a free and indiscriminate admission of Corn.

Chashow, July 1, 1847.

We had occasion in our Circular of the lat May to notice a most severe tightness in our Money Market; this, during the month, continued to increase, and for a time business operations were nearly at a time still. We helieve that there never was so great a pressure before felt in this country, and had it not been for the shoriness of its duration, it must have been attended with most serious consequences to the mercantile community generally. As it is, however, payments have been met with extraordinary punctuality, and we have had very few failures of any consequence. The present one weather, giving, as it does, prowise of an early and abundant harvest, has caused an an improved feeling in business generally; and should our present anticipations be resisted, we trust soon to see a return of prespecting.

Provisions still continue in good demard; and prices are high, especially for Beef, which is exceedingly scarce in this market so much so indeed, that ships have hid to send round to Liverpool for their stores.

GRAIN AND Floora-The fluentations in the prices of Breadstoff have been so greatharing the last two months, and, with such apparently sight grounds, that we feel quite at a loss what opinion to give as to how they may rue for the future. For the exit two months, at least, the price of grain must entirely depend upon the weather, and the reports from the interior of the country, as to the prospects for the crups, both of grain and potatoes, should these be good, prices will probably be depressed considerably below what they are at present, indeed, should the horvest be well got in, the reaction in the feelings of corn speculators will probably be a great, as to render floor and Wheatfor a time, almost massicable, at any price. We however still incline to the opinion, that with the most abmodant harvest ever produced, we shall need large supplies from stroad, as the whole of Great Britain, under fast callivation will by no means produce sufficient food for the supply of our population without potatoes, and these, besides only being planted in much smaller quantities than usual, will indealized by the season again be more or less affected with diseases; we therefore thick, that how ever low the prices of Wheat and Flour may so, in the meantime, that toward next Winter they will rule moderately high, and that purchases at a low figure in the United States, if held for six or eight months, must result well.

Yours. Thus, I received with large imports and spiendid weather, have piaced our Grain trade in a very dull and dectining position. Prices of all descriptions have tumbled down in all directions. On the 21st uit, factors succeeded in raising the price of English Wheel 2 per quarter. Foreign moved off slowly at our last quotations. Indian Coro was procurable at considerably reduced prices. On the 2st little business was done, and the advance noted above was lost. In Indian Coro no transactions. On the 25th haidly any business was francated but holders and buyers acting cauthously; insected both holders and buyers acting cauthously; inthere was a decreased demand; and though factors were willing to accept prices is to a per quarter, and in some cases its below those of that day week, they could not accept in clearing the stands. Foreign Wheat was like wise very difficult of disposal; and we must reduce quotations of the latter quite as much as those of the former. The millers put down the top price of Flour to 70s per sack, and American Flour was at least 2s per bbl. lower than on Monday [ast. Beans were, in consequence of large foreign activate, offered 2s to 3s per qr. chancer. Peas were obtainable at a decline of is to 2s per qr. and indiant corn was wholly neglected. On the 3st the trade continued to rule exceeding duit, in no respect recovering the depression above noted in years all keeping completely on the reserve, prices were therefore mereix nominal. The market held on the 2d instant was very quelt, and Whest wold at a reduction of 5s per qr. Oats are is to 2s per qr. cheaper, and slow sale at this decline.

continental.—Our advices from the Medelerranean during the past formight are very dull. At Marselles a perfect panic appears to be have been caused in the Corn trade by the extent of the arrivals from the Bisck Sea, and the sudden cassation of the British demand. Letters free on board, but the naticity to sell was then not quite so great as it had previously been. Letters from Legionra state that the crops in Italy were very promising, and that havest operations were likely to be commenced about the close of the month. As the editor of the Pennsylvanian, he was courteous and spirited, but for some years he has retired from the political meles, and sought the more congenial occupation of literary writing.
